GOD IS LOVE AND NOTHING ELSE

PRaise THE LORD.

HOUMA, LA., March 11, 1887.

DEAR INTERIOR:—The full moon, or showery weather, has brought several days of the beautiful "spell" that welcomed us here. To-day the sun is out in radiant splendor again. Last night was so threatening after a day of down-pour, that "Uncle Billy," our wooden-legged, colored sexton, stumped down, to advise that the lamps in the Hall should not be lighted. To which we assented, as it would have been sheer punishment, to drag a congregation out such a night—feasible as such a gathering might be in a well paved and well lighted town or city—to neither of which characteristics, Houma can fairly lay claim.

The "Sunny South," which, in January, in Central Mississippi, we found to be a "delusion and a snare," is no longer a mockery. We have it in its attractive loveliness this morning. The orange trees, with their leaves of waxen green, have such a glint on them, from the slanting rays of the morning sun, that they seem to be laden with a crop of flashing gems. The live oaks have shed the old leaves and are dressed in the tender spring garb of their beautiful species. The moss has just been picked from the boughs and lies in gray mounds under each tree, yet with enough left on the limbs from the plucking, to make feathery pendant; without the smothering and sombre effect of the full drapery, when allowed to have its unchecked will of growth. Being a parasite unless the moss is stripped occasionally, or regularly, from the poor suffocated trees, they are greatly injured and, in time, even destroyed. The orange tree is as common as the apple tree with us, and grows to a real tree's proportions—not the shrub we nurse in our green houses. The fig abounds, everywhere, and of varied kinds—the most delicate being the calceolaria, with its sweetest of them all. The magnolia fuscata, with its heavy lusciousness of fragrant odor is now in full bloom. It is the calceolaria of the South—bad and flower alike in shape—only the chocolate brown of the latter is replaced by the pure white of the former. The magnolia grandiflora, with its superb bloom, as everyone knows, is a stately forest tree—the pride of these latitudes, from Eastern Florida to Texas.

What a charming luxury it is to rise with the sun, and stroll as I daily do, be fore breakfast, up and down the plank walk between the house and the front gate; under the umbrageous live oaks (king, with undisputed title, of all the Southern trees); breathing the delicious morning air; listening to the songs of birds, that fill the air with varied harmonies; and taking a romp in turn, with "Frank"—our fine "Loveliness" Setter—registered, blue-blooded, affectionate, and unexcelled as a watchman at night, or a hunter, of unerring scent, a field. There is no end of the birds here—as of game, of nearly every kind you can call for. "Frank," during these warm spring days, being of an irrepressible active turn, and full of his strange interest for hunting things that creep and fly, amuses himself by setting endless butterflies. Whether he takes them for some diminutive game bird, or stalks them to keep his nose in good practice, or for some other occult canine reason, we can not know; but all day long he dogs (literally) these unconscious flower flutters, and when, after standing, statue like, on three legs, in the orthodox position, till something flashes his game, he will nose away at the spot from which they have flown, with as much diligence as if a covey of partridges had occupied it. When weariness overtakes him at this, he will curl up on the veranda and hunt, in dreamland, for a change.

I was quite interested to learn that La Fite, the old-free booter, infested these bayous in Terre Bonne, running up Grand Caillon bayou, especially, to unlade his plundered cargo. A pirate, of course, is a boy's model, under the stimulus of the charming literature that was in vogue, when I was young; and I could never think of one of this class of cut throats, in any other connection, than as a dashing fellow with beard of curling jet; a rolling collar of spotless white, with a black tie in a sailor's knot; a cutless jewel-bitted; red silk sash; Turkish slippers; commanding a rakish schooner with spocryphal sailing qualities—"bounding with slanting keel" over the blue water; and the loveliest of women, waiting for his return, in the cave of wonders, where his stored up wealth was littering her boudoir, in the shape of costly brocades and bric a brac interspersed with diamonds, emeralds, and pearls.

The grimy, bloodstained, powder blackened scoundrels—everyone deserving a thousand halts—refused to materialize to me; thoroughly in sympathy with the hand some rascal, in pursuit of a heavily laden Spanish galleon, from which, after "deposing" of its defenders, according to the pirate code, he was to get more lovely things, to adorn his beautiful bride's boudoir. How the devil does educate the children! He knows where to make lasting impressions, and how little do parents seem to care what their children read! To this day—no ineradicable are the lessons of childhood—Dick Turpin and Black Ben, Robin Hood and his "merrie men," Bob Roy, Jack Sheppard, Paul Clifford, Capt. Kydd, La Fite, et id genus omne are invested with a glamour of romance that quite hides away their real characters. Most attractive villains, every one, and will be, I suppose.

The "lay of the land" in these parishes that fringe our great country to the south, is quite uniform. Nearest the gulf innumerable shallow bays, guarded from the ocean surf by a necklace of low-lying, narrow islands or barren reefs, and a very paradise of oysters and fish. Then the "floating prairie," already described, skirting the salt water bays, and buoyed up by fresh or brackish water; then the terra firma, with its drainage of sluggish bayous, like the fingers of one's hand. Between these digital drains lie the beautiful sugar plantations—the position ever the same. First the water front upon the navigable bayou; then the broad belt of acreage, in cane cultivation; then the cypress swamp, with its stately timber trees—rivalling the most valuable of pine forests, in intrinsic worth. Bursting through this belt of cypress, you will come out upon the rear of other sugar plantations, facing, in their turn, another bayou; and so on to the ending of the chapter. The belts of cypress swamp are like the alleys between the city properties, facing on parallel streets and standing back to back.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, the life of one of our members, Bro. Adam Carpenter, was on the night of the 11th inst., murderously taken from him near the hour of midnight, by an unknown assassin, calling him out of his house and from his bed of rest, and without warning or provocation, firing upon him with a gun heavily loaded with buckshot and thereby killing him immediately, and whereas the lives of all good citizens are rendered insecure by the occurrence of such events in our midst, it behooves all citizens, both white and colored, to unite their efforts for the suppression of such lawlessness, and the speedy arrest and punishment of the guilty, therefore be it Resolved, 1st. That in the murderous assassination of Bro. Adam Carpenter, an irreparable wrong has been inflicted upon every good citizen in the community.

2nd. That this great crime demands the immediate and united efforts of every citizen for the arrest and punishment of the guilty.

3rd. That in the life and character of our deceased brother, we have conspicuously illustrated the virtues of integrity, industry, honesty, sobriety and brotherly kindness.

4th. That in the life and character of the deceased, we recognize one who was devoted to the interests of the Masonic principles, of which order he was a bright and leading member.

5th. That in his death an irreparable loss has been inflicted upon a most worthy family, a devoted wife and mother is robbed of her husband and five children deprived of a father's wisdom and counsel.

6th. That this Lodge extend to the family of the deceased their sincere sympathy in this great trial and hereby assure them their sorrow is keenly experienced by our own hearts, in token of which we will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

7th. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, also a copy to the INTERIOR JOURNAL and Danville Advocate, with the request that they publish the same. Respectfully and fraternally submitted,

L. B. ADAMS, } Com'tee.
J. B. GREEN,
SAM'L REID,

—The Spies Van Zoet marriage certificate has been declared invalid.

—I never had any sympathy," said Beecher, years ago, "with the Episcopal prayer, 'From sudden death deliver us.' When I go I pray that I may go swiftly, like a falling star; go in the midst of my usefulness, and not be chained in some living death, a burden to myself and the friends I love." One prayer at least of the great preacher seems to have been answered for his end was exactly as he had prayed for.

LONDON, LAUREL COUNTY.

—Smoke "The Leader" cigar at J. & E. H. Hackney's.

—Who said the Winchester Democrat under the new management would be a Buckner organ, any way? (Bruce Champ. E.J.)

—The shop of the monumental sign, John T. Hatcher, proprietor, is not only the best but the cheapest barber shop in the city.

—Transient as well as regular custom respectfully solicited and politely waited upon at the shop of the monumental sign, John T. Hatcher, proprietor.

—London is now passing through a severe winter famine. The Jersey "Lily," "Pink," "Star" or "Brinkle" would draw heavily here at the present writing!

—A movement is on foot to pike Main street so that it will be possible and possible to get to the depot and elsewhere about town that may be required. May the Lord prosper the "project."

—Volume 1, Number 1, of the Jellico News graces our table. It is live as most infants and smacks loudly of Dr. F. E. G. Lindsey, whom Col. S. M. B. doubtless remembers.

—The recently organized lodge at this place of Knights of Honor, is enjoying a boom, since all things must boom. We are informed, "believe and as charge," that ten petitions for membership will go in at our next meeting.

—Our enterprising barber, Mr. John T. Hatcher, has had a beautiful new sign painted in almost all the colors of the rainbow, which now pilots the stranger to the chair from whence no man ever departs dissatisfied.

—John T. Hatcher's stand, one door south of the Riley Hotel, is the place to get a good, easy shave and a fashionable hair cut. This excellent barber makes few pretensions, but thoroughly understands his business.

—A traveler hired a horse from the livery stable of W. H. Jackson & Co., the other day, and rode him to Manchester, a distance of 21 miles, over the meanest mud road in the State, within four hours. The horse will die and the traveler will be loser $100.

—W. H. Williams, recently of Barbourville, is home again. Mrs. Lucy J. Williams, who has been in Louisville for some weeks, has returned home. Supervisor J. A. Smith, who has been transferred to the main L. & N. line, with headquarters at Elizabethtown, will move his family there in a few days. Mr. Smith and family during their stay among us have won many friends and all regret the necessity of the change, while rejoicing in Mr. Smith's good fortune.

HUSTONVILLE, LINCOLN COUNTY.

—N. D. Snow was thrown violently from a frightened horse on the street Saturday afternoon. He was unconscious when taken up and when partially restored gave evidence of a severe concussion of the brain. He was taken home in a buggy in the evening and is reported as suffering intensely.

—The sudden and violent death of Adam Carpenter created a sensation unparalleled in our part of the county. The character of the deceased, the suddenness of the call, the mystery in which the act was veiled, all conspire to give it a startling interest. But as investigation progressed amazement was changed to horror, and sympathy gave place to consternation. I have been handed me for publication the enclosed action of the lodge, the propriety of which at this juncture (in view of the peculiarity of the case) I deem somewhat questionable. We should be careful not to add a feather to the weight that is already crushing burdened souls to death, nor to increase by a single pang an agony which is already in supportable.

—I spent last Friday in attendance on the second monthly examination of Miss Alma Tompkins' school near Maywood. By the way, since the school is beginning to vindicate itself so proudly there is a disposition to christen the edifice "Lynwood," which name is Sylvan, euphonious and suggestive. But be this as it may, Miss T. is certainly doing a noble work for that community. She is a young lady, inspired by an ardent zeal for her mission, thoroughly equipped for her enterprise and naturally qualified for her arduous undertaking. And her efforts are already beginning to tell with marked and salutary results. I remember visiting this school at no very remote period when it could not with propriety have been designated a model institution. But Miss Tompkins with her mild but inexorable regime has effected a miraculous improvement. The visitor finds himself now in the presence of a company of young ladies and gentlemen. The material is naturally fine and Miss Tompkins, with plastic skill, has moulded it into shapes of order, industry, emulation and progress. She threw open her curriculum from the English alphabet to Latin—from arithmetical notation to the myetic sign language of algebra—making geography poetic and physiology romantic, and urged the visitor to select at will the exercises. The "Lynwood" people deserve great credit. They have taken hold of the educational problem in sober enlightened earnest. First they have provided an excellent building. Next they pay a living salary. Consequently they secure the services of an efficient teacher—and finally they visit and encourage the school.

DANVILLE, BOYLE COUNTY.

—Mr. R. T. Queenberry, of St. Paul, Minn., is visiting friends in Danville.

—Mr. Wm. Duke, son of Col. Wm. Duke, of this place, was recently married to Miss Sionestreet, at Kansas City.

—Messrs. Engleman & Fields recently bought from S. W. Wheelock, of Moline, Ill., the fine brood mare, Lottie McGregor, who is a fine bay, 15½ hands, foaled 1879 by Robert McGregor, 2:17½, dam by Romulus, sire of the dams of Roxie McGregor, 2:27½, McGregor Bay, 2:29, second dam by Comanche Chief, by Hill's Black Hawk; now in foal to Sultan, 2:24. The mare arrived Tuesday morning in fine condition.

—Alex Jenkins, who has been in jail since last November, charged with stealing $18 from Ned Owsley was acquitted Wednesday evening. A righteous decision everybody thought who heard the trial. The grand jury was finally discharged Wednesday evening.

—The long agony in regard to Charles Henderson, the alleged "fakir," &c., is over for the present and Charles is now a free man and with his friends in Louisville. After a thorough trial the jury disagreed Wednesday, standing ten to two in favor of acquittal. Judge Morrow reduced the $4,000 bond heretofore required, to $1,500, which was given, Mr. E. B. Russell, of this place, being the surety. Henderson testified in his own behalf and denied most positively that he was at Junction City at the time Dr. Burke parted with his money. In this he was corroborated by Mr. Long, the Treasurer of the circus and Mr. Prentice, the manager of the side shows. In view of all the circumstance in the case, it is not at all probable that a conviction can ever be secured.

—James Schoolen, the young colored lawyer, who was admitted to the bar at Lancaster some months ago, appeared in court Wednesday, as attorney for Tom Elmore, also colored, and indicted for malicious shooting. He filed a demurrer to the indictment, the point being that the word "feloniously" was necessary to make the document good. The demurrer was overruled and the case then went on trial before a colored jury, the first every in Boyle county. Schoolen addressed the jury in behalf of his client and got him off with one year in the penitentiary, when he might and probably ought to have gone free. The following were the heroic twelve: Gibson E. Dram, Preston Shirley, E. B. Chestham, Jordan Mitchell, John Ricketts, Stephen Johnson, Felix Bruce, Harrison Shelby, Jacob Warren, Jackson Fry, Wm. Embury, Thomas Engleish.

—John Belvin, colored, of America, Ga., had Ellis Dendard arrested on a charge of burglary and taken before a magistrate for trial. He then had himself excused to hunt up the witness. The court waited for two hours and then adjourned on learning that Belvin had in the mean time eloped with Dendard's wife, the latter's arrest being simply a scheme to keep him out of the way until the elopement could be consummated.

—Controller Durham has decided that no portion of the interest of the fund of $250,000 appropriated by Congress for the education of the blind can be used in the purchase of embossed books and tangible apparatus of the education of the blind made elsewhere than at the American Institute for the Blind in Louisville.

—Buffalo suffered a $300,000 fire.

W. P. WALTON.

THE year of our Lord, 1887, will go down to history as remarkable for its railroad accidents resulting in great loss of life. To the list so far made another was added Monday, fully as terrible as its predecessors. A suburban train, loaded with persons who worked in Boston, broke through a dry bridge, seven miles from there, and was dashed to the earth 40 feet below, carrying death and destruction with it. The number killed outright is stated at 32, while 114 were wounded, many of whom will die. The scenes at the wreck rival those of the White River catastrophe save that fire did not add to the horror of the accident and the recital of them almost freezes the blood with terror.

THE report that that old Magwump, Secretary of the War Edicott, who was discovered by Cleveland and showed on an unwilling country, had resigned, caused a ripple of joy in the hearts of the "boys in the trenches," but it turned out to be untrue, the more the pity. Edicott is one of those inescapable, impracticable aristocrats, who has surrounded himself with all the pomp and exclusiveness of a great potentate, and has retained the rascals in office to the disgust of every democrat, who voted at the polls to turn them out. Edicott will not resign, but Cleveland owes it to those who elected him to give him his walking pants.

THE right kind of an old prohibitionist is the Sultan of Morocco. He has prohibited the sale or purchase of intoxicants of all kinds and abolished by order the use of tobacco. A great quantity of the latter was publicly burned at his command and several Moors have been stripped and flogged through the streets for smoking in defiance of the order. When the prohibitionists get on top in this country, and they seem to be ascending that way, they ought to pass a law making it punishable with stripes also to buy or sell any kind of intoxicants.

THE Masonic order is very strict in its requirements as to the moral standing of those who seek membership in it and especially requires that applications shall lie over a month so that the candidate can be fully investigated. Prudence Lodge in New York observed neither of these rules, but initiated on the same night that they were proposed, a murderer and a dive keeper; on learning which, the Grand Lodge declared its charter forfeited and expelled each member engaged in the dishonorable and unmasonic conduct.

Gov. LEE, in his message to the Virginia Legislature, which he convened in extra session Wednesday, recommends the appointment of a commission on the part of the State to meet a similar commission on the part of the bondholders, the object being a true presentation of the revenues and resources of the State. Won't we never hear the end of this tiresome question? If the debt is honest, it should be paid and that's an end o'nt.

A HARRIS paper is mean enough to say that the speech of Gen. Buckner, purporting to have been delivered at Burlington, which was published in full in the Courier-Journal and is now being industriously scattered over the State in pamphlet form was written by Col. E. Polk Johnson. Not knowing we would not like to say, but we do say and say it boldly at that, that it is a deuced good thing no matter who indited it.

WHEN not hunting up something to find fault with in the public record of Senator Harris, Capt. Wallace Gruelle, of the Grayson News, devotes his time to writing sermons. In his issue of last week he has as fine a production on the subject of God's Love as Bro. Barnes himself could preach from his favorite text.

DON'T you give up old Cash Clay yet. He made a speech at Irvine Monday and at its close the vote of the county of Estell was instructed for him, though they do say that as many democrats as republicans took a hand in the meeting. This is the first instruction that the old general has received and is in all probability the last.

EX-SENATOR JOE McDONALD says that the Interstate Commerce bill will do more harm than good, but that he is willing that his son shall help do it. He would not have the place himself as he knows no more about railroads than a hog does about holiday, but his boy has made a study of the business.

A NEW YORK woman put off having the whooping cough till she was 91 years old and then she whooped herself to death. We have always advised that such things be attended to in youth, and if the old lady had followed the advice she might have lived to be a centenarian.

M. C. LYSLE has mounted the tripod of the Winchester Democrat and announces that he is for Simon Bolivar Buckner first, last and all the time. The late owner, Mr. D. C. Lysle, was an equally as warm Harris man.

THE Jellico, Tenn., News, James Silliman, editor, and T. S. Hutchison, manager, is the latest venture in journalism. It was gotten out under many difficulties, but is a very creditable sheet in every respect.

SENATOR BECK can by no means read his title clear to his seat in Congress. Dr. Standiford's admirable letter is being discussed all over the State and his stock is quoted higher each day.

THE travesty on justice enacted by the average jury has another forcible example in the case of Comar tried for the murder of a convict, by beating him to death. The trial was in Georgetown, whither the case had been taken from Fayette and the jury found that the prisoner should go to jail six months and pay a fine of $1,000. This would be ridiculous if it was not such a serious matter. Either Comar is guilty and deserves a severe sentence or he ought to have been cleared entirely.

IF half the stories told about Secretary Manning's inscience in office are true he did not step down and out a minute too soon. We hope, however, that the statement that he and President Cleveland had an open rupture and that he has retired from the Cabinet determined to get even with the administration, is not true. Though a much overrated man, Manning is a politician all over and wields quite an influence in New York State.

MIKE KAELEN, the Louisville wife murderer, who got a new trial through the kindness of that friend to criminals, the Court of Appeals, because the word feloniously did not appear in the indictment, is again on trial, with the word feloniously properly inserted. If the Court of Appeals continues to split hairs in its search for technicalities, it will soon climax the growing contempt felt for it.

CONFLICTING reports come from Pennsylvania about the probable gerrymandering of Randall's district. It is very safe, however, to state that he will not be cut out. The republicans are not likely to give up a man who is worth more to them than any score of their own members in Congress.

IN his Lexington speech the other day, Senator Harris stated emphatically that the man or set of men who charge that he is not a democrat from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, is a liar and the truth is not in him. "Arise my Harris."

—An alarm of fire was given at half past twelve, from the furniture factory, Wednesday. The roof was discovered to be in flames. By prompt work of the local bucket brigade the fire was soon extinguished. Thanks are due the citizens for their prompt answer to the alarm and call for help.

—What would have proved a disastrous fire was happily averted by the presence of mind of our wide-awake merchant, Will Davis, a few days since. A six year-old boy of a next door neighbor set fire to a pile of straw used for a dog bed at the side of the storehouse of Davis & White and when discovered by Mr. Davis was in a fair way to fire the store-house. By going to work with his naked hands and dragging away the straw and throwing dirt on the burning mass it was subdued and a large conflagration was thereby prevented.

—Mt. Vernon is again without municipal government, four of the trustees having resigned at their last meeting. The cause assigned for it being the strong opposition they met from a number of citizens to a small tax that was proposed to be levied for the purpose of paying the town's expenses in way of keeping up the streets, &c. It is thought other trustees will be appointed within a few days and all will move again in the accustomed path of ease and quietude provided some member of the new board does not propose to levy a tax of some kind.

—W. B. Smith, of Garrard, was here Monday. The potato club held a called meeting Monday evening in honor of visiting brother, J. B. Fish. Nate Evans, Alfred Young and Seth Parris, piloted by C. Your friend for best goods and low prices, F. L. Thompson.

A Kicking Tax-Payer.

[To the Editor of the Interior Journal:]
MT. VERNON, March 17.—At the late session of the Kentucky Legislature, an act was passed authorizing the Rockcastle county court to issue the bonds of the county to an amount not exceeding $8,000 for the purpose of building a jail and jailer's residence, and at the October term of the county court a committee was appointed to visit the jails at London and Williamsburg and ascertain the plans, cost of building, &c. That committee was instructed to report at a special term, I think in January, 1887. At any rate this court met and appointed M. J. Miller, M. J. Cook and H. H. Baker as a building committee to let out the work, &c. This committee has gone ahead and privately let out the contract to J. W. Mullins, of Laurel county. I am not objecting to the man who secured the contract, because he comes to us well recommended as a builder. But I am objecting to this way of letting out a contract for the erection of a public building privately. And another thing, the people ought to know what their jail is to cost. One of the members of the committee when asked what the contract was let at replied: "We have agreed to keep the price a secret for a few days." What do the tax payers of Rockcastle county say to this way of doing business? And besides all this perhaps some citizens of our county might want to have a chance to make a few dollars out of the job. I know of at least two parties, both good, reliable men, who wanted to put in bids for the work. And behold their consternation when they began to make inquiries in reference to the time for putting in bids, to find that the whole job had been fixed up privately. I, as a tax payer of Rockcastle county, demand that the committee explain their actions. The people have a right to know and a few of them are determined to find out how "these things are."

—Miss Louana James has completed a very large and beautiful oil painting representing a ship on the ocean during a terrible storm. The representation is perfect and looks as if it might have been painted from nature instead of a model. The waves are dashing furiously against the sides of the vessel, and as I gazed upon the scene I almost momentarily expected to see the ship dashed to pieces. It is an excellent specimen of art and Miss Lou ought to be proud of the talent that is here.

—Mr. Scott Farris has rented a part of Mr. W. O. Hansford's house and moved thereto. Mrs. Sophia Carson has rented rooms in the German hotel and gone to housekeeping there. Mr. and Mrs. Joe Rhineheart are now cooly domiciled in their new home on Main street. Mrs. Elias Carson is visiting friends in Stanford. Rev. C. C. Green left this week for Texas. —One of our young men who is yet at a precocious age approached me the other night and producing an official looking document from his pocket said: "I am getting up a club of 25 boys to obtain 25 copies of Biddle's half-dime library. Each member pays 25 cents and is allowed to read any or all of the 25 books." Said I: "My young friend you must excuse me as I know of no work I choose to read published in the library you mention." "Surely," said he, "you can not have perused 'Deadwood Dick on Deck,' or 'Calamity Jane, the Heroine of Dakota'?" I was compelled to admit that I had not, which confession I could plainly see lowered me considerably in the estimation of the young man, who no longer thought me a fit candidate for his reading circle. He had already obtained some 20 or 21 names composed chiefly of young boys.

HER HOSPITALITY.

A BIT OF EXPERIENCE IN A ROCKY MOUNTAIN CABIN.

How a Believer in "Rude but Genuine Hospitality" Met with a Surprise—A Tall, Grim-faced Woman at the Back Door.

"These mountaineers are the most hospitable people on earth. It is a rude but genuine hospitality. They would share their last loaf with a stranger within their gates. The latch string hangs out for all."

We were riding down a steep Rocky Mountain trail, my friend Clate and I, when Clate made the remarks quoted. He was an enthusiastic over the noble traits of the honest minor and mountaineer. Certain experiences of my own had made me skeptical on the subject.

At the base of the mountain stood a little log cabin.

"Now," said Clate, "I'll prove my theory. It's past dinner time and we're both hungry as wolves. I'll wager anything you like that we'll get a good square meal at that cabin free of charge."

Five minutes later we stood before the closed door of the cabin.

"Hello!" roared Clate.

There was no reply.

"Hello, I say!"

This time Clate rapped loudly on the door. There being no response he lifted the latch, when the door swung open showing no one within, although the cabin was evidently being occupied.

"All right!" cried Clate, cheerily. "Come on in, Ned, and we'll forage round and see what we can find in the commissary. The folks won't care. They've left the door open on purpose for wayfarers like us to step in and help themselves. It's just like them. It's your westerner who knows what true hospitality is."

Clate "foraged around" for some time, but all he could find was a piece of dry salt pork and a few potatoes.

A sudden surprise.

"We'll help ourselves to what there is," said Clate, cheerily. "You build a fire, Ned. We're welcome to what we've found, I'll bet on that, for—"

He stopped. A tall, lank, grim visaged woman, with a leathery looking face, suddenly appeared at a back door. She saw Clate, and yelled out:

"Drop them taters!"

"Why, madam, I—"

"You drop them taters!"

"We are strangers, you see, madam, and—"

"Drop 'em."

A short grun on the wall. She snatched it down, brought it to her shoulder with a jerk and said:

"Drop them taters too quick."

Clate dropped them.

"Drop that pork."

Clate dropped it.

"Now you fellows git."

I had already got, but Clate, abashed and rebuked though he was, lingered until the shotgun was again pointed toward him and the woman said:

"Clear yourself! I'll learn you how to walk into a body's house and help yourself to one's vittles. That bacon and them taters ain't to be bought for love nor money, let alone up by you uns for nothing. Now you light out!"

We "lit out," hungry and crestfallen, and Clate has been dumb ever since on the subject of western hospitality.—Zenae Dane in Detroit Free Press.

Civilization's Opposite Poles.

"Extremes meet. While the toilers are in battle array for a bare living, the world which lives among, and by the trade in, pure luxuries is enjoying the liveliest season ever known in America. All the picture exhibitions and sales thus far have done better than ever before in the history of the country. Collectors are now preparing to disburse at least $2,000,000 at the auctions of the Sten arts, the Graves, the Probasco and other pictures. A dealer in antiques told me recently that at a recent sale of part of his stock he cleared over $20,000 by the sale of the most valuable part of it and still has his real treasures on hand. Architects whom I know say that they never had so many orders for fine residences, nor at such prices; and the great decorating firms are all busy embellishing our rich men's palaces as they never yet have been embellished.—New York News.

Talk About "Soft Snaps."

Steve Kowan, the big policeman who whirls a club about Madison street, was talking about soft snaps the other night. "When I first came to town," he said, "I got a job breaking the ice around a big water main under the river to the west side. It was a bitter cold winter and I suffered terribly. I kept the main clear of ice, however, and when spring came it found me still sitting around that old pipe. I expected my discharge every day, but as it did not come I began to realize the fact that I was in full possession of the sun. Very little ice formed around the main during the months of June, July and August, and I had plenty of time to go to horse races and base ball games. That snap ran along until October, and I never missed a week's pay in all that time. Talk about soft snaps. There is one with a blue ribbon tied around it."—Chicago Herald.

Intoxication Among Animals.

"The philosophers," says Houzeau "that assert that monkeys have once used intoxicating liquors to excess will not touch them again are more desirous of giving us a lesson in morals than of doing the exact truth. The majority of tame monkeys are fond of wine and spirits. They help themselves when they can. They enjoy getting drunk, and some of them become so tipsy that they refuse to reform in spite of the most severe punishment. Besides, their intoxication resembles precisely that of man; their legs are badly controlled, their tongue is thick and its movements uncertain."

Moreover, this identity of the effects of intoxication descends much lower in the animal kingdom. Donkeys have been seen drunk. Horses get drunk; and if, as a general thing, dogs refuse wine, some of them are addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages when well sweetened and sufficiently diluted.—Henry Howard in The Cosmopolitan.

His Fads Were Clocks and Shoes.

Speaking of eccentric characters, a gentleman the other day recalled the idiosyncrasies of the late Sylvester Bonafant, who lived over what is now Madden's saloon. He died some years ago. He was a most eccentric but very methodical man. He was a devoted lover of horseflesh and always kept a fine team, in which he drove out every day for perhaps twenty years, never varying as to route or time. His action in taking his daily drive was as regular as a special train, and he arrived at particular points as punctual as though "on time" according to schedule. He invariably drove out Walnut street to Ninth, up Ninth to Ridge avenue, along Ridge avenue up Broad. He carried a clock to time himself and returned to the stable at 5 p. m. After his death 135 pairs of shoes were found in his room and thirty-nine clocks.—Philadelphia News.

A TALK WITH VON MOLTKE.

His Opinion of Grant and Hancock—The Coming War.

Capt. Nalbro Frazier, one of the best known of the military men of Philadelphia, has returned from a two years' sojourn in Europe. While abroad he had a long personal interview with the great commander of the German army, Gen. Von Moltke. Being pressed to speak of the interview, he said:

"I called on Gen. Von Moltke at his palace, just outside the gates at the end of the famous road called Under den Linden. It is a modest looking house enough, notwithstanding its high sounding name, and is not nearly so handsome as Mr. Childs' or Mr. Scott's. After I had sent up my card, the servant, coming back, inquired particularly why I wished to see Gen. Von Moltke. Because, said I, I have been a soldier, and now that Gen. Grant is dead I consider Gen. Von Moltke the greatest military man living. The servant retired, and in a moment returned. 'In that case,' said he, 'his excellency will be glad to see you.' I followed the servant up stairs and into a drawing room. As I stepped across the threshold I almost stumbled against the great general, who was standing by the door holding my card."

"Capt. Frazier," he inquired in excellent English, very slowly, but well pronounced. "I am," I answered.

"And you are an American?"

"Yes."

"A soldier?"

"Yes."

"And you have served under Gen. Grant?"

"Yes."

"And under Gen. Hancock, too?"

"And under Gen. Hancock."

"Then I am glad to see you. Sit you down."

"I took a seat by the window, and for three-quarters of an hour we had a chat. The general spoke in English altogether, and, though he enunciated with the slowness of deliberation, he never wanted for words. He spoke a good deal of our war, though. I considered it remarkable that he mentioned no names of generals but those of Grant and Hancock. He referred particularly to the battle of Gettysburg, and spoke of it as a great strategic contest. I asked him what his opinion was of Gen. Grant. 'Gen. Grant,' he replied, 'was a great general. He was one of the greatest that has ever lived.'"

"And Gen. Hancock?"

"Gen. Hancock was a brave soldier."

"I thought perhaps that he would refer to some of the men on the Confederate side, but he did not. He did not talk much either about the German army in detail, and observed that caution in speaking of home military matters that seems characteristic of German officers generally. He said, however, these words: 'We have long been endeavoring to make the German army the best in Europe, and I am beginning to believe that we are succeeding. We are endeavoring also to keep it in a state of constant preparation.' He said no more that could be construed as bearing on the future at all, and did not once refer to France or French military men. As I was leaving he shook me cordially by the hand."

"I will call again when in Berlin," I said.

"It will be useless," he replied, "unless you return very soon."

"Why?"

"Because I came in with the century, but I shall not see it go out. I am not for long."—Philadelphia Press.

What the Nose Indicates.

Maj. Sophus Schack, an officer in the Danish army, on the subject of physiognomic indication, to which his position as an inspector of recruits has led him to devote a considerable share of attention. Maj. Schack agrees with Aristotle in putting his faith in noses. He can make a good guess at a man's constitution from the size and build of his nose, a large nose, for instance, almost invariably indicating superior chest capacity and power of lungs. It is a still more accurate index to mental qualities, for, belonging as it does at once to the most and least mobile portions of the face, it faithfully reflects the most fugitive movements of the mind. In the child the nose is the most insignificant and least developed portion of the physiognomy. It is not till the intellectual faculties come into play that the nasal organ acquires its characteristics. Savages have no noses worthy of the name. Maj. Schack's observations lead him to conclude that a small and retreating nose betokens cunning and fineness; a straight and thin nose, taste and delicacy; an aquiline nose, judgment, reason and egotism; while a shapeless and clumsy nasal protuberance almost always indicates intellectual dullness and want of savoir fair.—St. James Gazette.

A Cow on the Range.

Cattle are queer creatures, and it takes a great deal of experience to learn their ways. In choosing a range, a novice would be likely to prefer a level plain, where grass could be found in all places, but the experienced cowboy would infinitely prefer a rolling country, if possible with high bluffs here and there. The reason of this is that snow is likely to cover the entire surface of a level plain, but is nearly certain to be blown from the tops and at least one side of hills, leaving the grass bare. A cow is not an animal of remarkable intellectual attainments, and will starve when the ground is covered with snow in deep, it never seeming to occur to it that a few strokes of its hoofs would uncover the grass. A horse, on the other hand, will do this, but it seems to be a cow's reasoning powers. High bluffs give excellent shelter in storms, and prevent cattle from drifting. It used to be the opinion of cattlemen that the northwestern country was too cold for cattle, but experience has proved that a cow can live wherever a buffalo can, and any range formerly frequented by buffalo is a good one for cattle.—Globe-Democrat.

Mrs. Cleveland's Ways.

Mrs. Cleveland's tact has never been more quietly and yet successfully exerted than in her simple policy of refusing to close the doors on reception days when the advertised hour of closing arrives. The demands of business, delays of livery men, lateness of railway trains, or a thousand and one other causes which make men swear in braggy style, prevent many people who are naturally curious to meet and know Mrs. Cleveland from reaching the White House doors in time, and those who have been thus delayed and, by her kindness, have yet been able to be presented, have given quite ardent in their praise of her act. Strange as it may seem, they are not few in number nor do they all come from a single city or score of cities.

"I know it is not more than a curiosity to see the president's wife," she recently said to a friend, "but it seems to give pleasure, and I am glad to put myself out a little to oblige them. I don't, of course, want to make a show of myself, but I am becoming accustomed to being stared at, and what is more important, all of the curiosity is not of a vulgar kind."—Philadelphia Times.

African Rail Birds.

Mr. Stanley, the explorer, says that the greatest difficulty encountered in building railroads in Africa is that the ostriches eat up the rails as fast as they are laid.—Norristown Herald.

CALLS FOR THE CASH.

SOME OF THE BIGGEST CHECKS EVER DRAWN IN AMERICA.

Commodore Vanderbilt's Check for a Million—Jay Gould Makes a Bit of Note Paper Worth $2,400,000—A Check for $14,000,000.

The framing of two checks and their appearance on the walls of President Depew's office in the Grand Central station has set people to talking and writing about the big checks that have been drawn in this country. One of these checks was for $1,000,000 and it was drawn by Cornelius Vanderbilt. The other one, for $2,000,000, was drawn by his son, William H. Vanderbilt. More money has been drawn in this country than in any other country in the world. It does not require a very large piece of paper to get a lot of money out of a bank, any more than it requires the ingenious chirography of a Spinner to make a green-back good. The awkward scroll, which no one would ever make out as Jay Gould, is just as good on a sheet of note paper as if the check was beautifully engraved, then made out with black and red ink, countersigned, punched and stamped.

THE OLD COMMODORE.

The New York Central checks, by the way, have on their face a handsomely engraved portrait on steel of the old commodore, and they have taken many millions of money out of the Chemical National bank. The money that they could call for has also contributed largely to the handsome profits of a bank that, with only $200,000 capital, has deposits of fifty times as much and pays its stockholders 10 per cent. per annum. Yet that is only a trifle over 3 per cent. per annum on the market value of the stock.

Probably Jay Gould has drawn more and larger checks than any other individual, except, perhaps, the treasurer of the United States or some of the sub-treasurers. Many remember the easy, off hand manner in which he testified about drawing checks for subscription to the American Cable company—he "could not remember whether it was for $5,000,000 or $10,000,000. Another of Mr. Gould's big checks was that which he drew in payment for Col. Scott's interest in the Texas and Pacific—all his stock and all the consolidated bonds which he held. The fate of the company was uncertain when Mr. Gould started for Philadelphia. The policies of the two men were radically different. Mr. Gould said that all he wanted to run was a general mail and express line, and Col. Scott said that no road could be run in that way; true economy required a thorough organization and competent managers, as well as employees. On that they disagreed, and Col. Scott, broken down and tired, gave up the ambition of his life. He had already made James P. Scott assistant to the president of the Texas and Pacific, and he had hoped to leave him that part of a great through transcontinental line working in close alliance with the Pennsylvania system. He found the battle too hot, and when he had come to terms Mr. Gould took the part of a plain notepaper and wrote upon it a check on the Fourth National bank of this city for a little more than $2,400,000.

A CHECK FOR $14,000,000.

The biggest check ever drawn in the United States was that given by John D. Taylor, now dead, but then treasurer of the Pennsylvania railroad, to Lee, Higginson & Co., of Boston, in payment for the Boston stock in the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore road. About $10,000,000 of it was owned in Boston. Nathaniel Taylor was the largest stockholder, and he had agreed to deliver to Jay Gould enough to give him a controlling interest and enable him to bring the road into the hands of the Jersey Central, and then dispose of the two as thought best. But Mr. Taylor was in his old age, and he was unable to fulfill the contract. Enough got out to put the Pennsylvania people on their guard, and their representatives met the Boston bankers in this city and never adjourned until the papers were drawn up by which they agreed to deliver a majority of the stock in the road at 140 on the dollar, which was about 10 per cent. more than they had ever been able to sell it at, all the individual stockholders being allowed to come and sell their stock at that figure. Taylor brought it to the Boston bankers, and on the 1st day of July the Boston party received Mr. Taylor's check on the National Bank of Commerce of this city for $14,250,440. This is believed to be the largest check ever drawn in this country.

That enormous sum of money was transferred from Philadelphia to Boston through New York without causing more than a ripple in the market, and yet if Treasurer Taylor had been less thoughtful or sagacious he could have caused a stringency in the money market which would have seriously affected all business. In the future, places it was well known weeks in advance that such a transfer would be made and the rate of exchange was affected thereby. Three weeks before the time came Mr. Taylor sent round to the banks and the brokers and asked them to send him any New York funds that they had, thus enabling them to save a day's interest, for he immediately gave them Philadelphia funds. The Boston bankers reversed the operation and the New York banks took all the Boston drafts that were offered. Thus a sum of money almost as great as the total of the Alabama award transferred through New York from Philadelphia to Boston, and without touching the money market perceptibly.—New York Mail and Express.

Anointing With Olive Oil.

At a well known sanitarium, inunction with olive oil was tried twenty years ago in cases of wasting disease. The results were so favorable that it has become a favorite prescription in various forms of disease, though in most cases coconut oil is now preferred to olive oil.

In an article on this subject in the December "Laws of Life," the writer shows that inunction has been found to be more satisfactory in its effects when administered by a strong attendant who is skilled to rub, rapidly and thoroughly, the surface of the body. The oil is more quickly absorbed, and there seems to be some value in the mere rubbing.

The practice seems to be especially suited to cases in which the stomach and intestinal tract are unable to digest fatty food.

It has been practiced with good results in cases of consumption (tuberculosis), attended with great loss of flesh; inunction due to chronic inflammation of the digestive tract. From two to six times a week the application can be made according to the patient's power of absorption.—Youth's Companion.

"Suffrage of the Plow."

Anent Lord Tennyson's bitter reference to "the suffrage of the plow" in his latest poem, it is recalled that less than three years ago he made one of his rare appearances in the house of lords expressly to vote for the franchise bill, which gave Dodge the ballot.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.
